Finding Compassion

*It starts out so slowly, this deadly disease.
No towering storm clouds, just a gentle breeze
So subtle at first that you may not notice
The pinpoint pupils, the eyes out of focus,
The unsteady gait, just a faint whiff of beer,
Or shift in a family's home atmosphere.*

*Then the virus starts to inhabit the host.
Your child disappears, leaving only a ghost,
And everything you fear appears in his place:
A master deceiver who lies to your face;
A monster; a thief; incurable dope fiend.
And nothing it infects can ever be cleaned.*

*From this virus, no one is safe or immune.
The symptoms always spread to others, and soon
They're all focused on themselves. Love falls away.
Hatred and distrust grow as their souls decay,
Worn down from the disease they try to suppress.
Empty lives fill with worry and constant stress.*

*But take comfort. There is a way to survive
This disorder and start to feel more alive.
It's this: understand that these moods of despair
Self-loathing, disgrace are mutual. Be aware
That the emotions from which you are reeling
Are the same ones that the addict is feeling.*

*Learn not to self-judge – to be gentle and kind.
Let go of your addict and unclutter your mind
Of all of that anger, shame and bile you've amassed.
Take care of yourself. Don't live in the past.
Imagine his pain, with detachment and love.
Be with him at eye level, not from above.*

*Store these precious assets so you can cash in
When the time comes to exhibit compassion.*

How to Use this Guide

Purpose

Finding support for dealing with substance use and related issues can be challenging. This Family Help Book, developed by the Chester County Department of Drug and Alcohol Services' Advisory Council, was created to guide you in connecting to the services needed.

Compiled with the assistance of individuals and family members who have lived experience, as well as representatives from recovery and treatment organizations, the guide includes resources for every step of the treatment and recovery process.

This guide focuses on families whose children suffer from Substance Use Disorder, but much of the advice and many of the resources apply to anyone who has been touched by this disease.

We hope it will help you and your loved ones find support, healing and the rewards of sustained recovery for each family member affected.

How This Guide is Organized

This guide is divided into two parts: Part 1 presents information in text form. After defining addiction (or what is clinically referred to as “substance use disorder” or “SUD”) and recovery, Part 1 progresses through prevention, early intervention, treatment and post-treatment services. Importantly, it also includes information on helping the family members of those suffering from substance use disorder.

Part 2 contains lists of organizations and other resources on the topic that serve the Chester County area, including contact information, meeting schedules and links to their websites.

Much of the information in each section is taken from three online sites that we have found helpful, current and reliable: The National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA); the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA); and the non-profit Partnership for Drug-Free Kids.

This guide is available in print and on the Chester County Department of Drug and Alcohol Services website. The online version contains active hyperlinks to other websites.

We Are Always Looking to Improve

We plan to update this guide quarterly and welcome your suggestions and changes, as well as feedback on the contents of this guide, at any time. You may submit your comments by email: familyresourceguide@chesco.org.

PART 1 – OVERVIEW OF SUBSTANCE USE DISORDER AND RECOVERY TOOLS

What is Addiction (Substance Use Disorder) and What is Recovery?

Defining Substance Use Disorder (SUD)

What society and doctors used to call “addiction” is now known by the clinical term “substance use disorder” or “SUD.” According to the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Administration (SAMHSA), a substance use disorder, or a drug use disorder, is characterized by being a mild, moderate, or severe dependence on certain drugs or prescription medications.

Substance use disorder is a primary, chronic disease with genetic, psychosocial, and environmental factors influencing its development and manifestations. It is progressive and often fatal.

It is characterized by impaired control over use of the substance, preoccupation with the substance, use of the substance despite adverse consequences, and distortions in thinking. It is compulsive use of a substance without regard to negative consequence.

The substances cause biochemical and structural changes in the brain, which reinforce use. Depending on the substance, this can occur relatively quickly or over longer periods of time.

There is also the presence of tolerance, meaning more and more of the substance is necessary to achieve the same effect. As a person’s tolerance increases, so does the potential for “withdrawal,” the group of symptoms that can occur when a person is no longer using. Withdrawal is the result of physical dependence. Withdrawal can include seizures, flu-like symptoms, sleep disturbances, and depression, depending on the substances used.

An estimated 35,000 Chester County residents suffer from a Substance Use Disorder.

Substance use disorders occur when the ongoing use of a drug, alcohol, or prescription medication causes a clinical inability to fulfill and experience normal activities and responsibilities, including work, school, and at home. Brain imaging studies show changes in the areas of the brain that relate to judgment, decision making, learning, memory, and behavior control.

People with severe substance use disorder have an intense focus on using one or more substances, such as alcohol or drugs, to the point that it takes over their life. They keep using alcohol or a drug even when they know it will cause problems. People can develop a substance use disorder to:

- Alcohol
- Marijuana
- PCP, LSD, and other hallucinogens
- Inhalants, such as paint thinners and glue
- Opioid pain killers, such as codeine and oxycodone, and heroin
- Sedatives, hypnotics, and anxiolytics (medicines for anxiety such as tranquilizers)
- Cocaine, methamphetamine, and other stimulants
- Tobacco

Defining Recovery

A recovery initiative sponsored by SAMHSA's Center for Substance Abuse Treatment defined recovery from alcohol and drug problems as "a process of change through which an individual achieves abstinence and improved health, wellness, and quality of life." The initiative adopted the following guiding principles:

- There are many pathways to recovery.
- Recovery is self-directed and empowering.
- Recovery involves a personal recognition of the need for change and transformation.
- Recovery is holistic, involving the body, mind, relationships, and spirit.
- Recovery has cultural dimensions.

- Recovery exists on a continuum of improved health and wellness.
- Recovery emerges from hope and gratitude.
- Recovery is a process of healing and self-redefinition.
- Recovery involves addressing discrimination and transcending shame and stigma.

Recovery is characterized by continual growth and improvement in one's health and wellness that may involve setbacks. Because setbacks are a natural part of life, resilience becomes a key component of recovery.

"Recovery from a Substance Use Disorder is best achieved through a combination of self-management, mutual support, and professional care provided by trained and certified professionals."¹

The process of recovery is supported through relationships and social networks. This often involves family members who become the champions of their loved one's recovery. Families of people in recovery may experience adversities that lead to increased family stress, guilt, shame, anger, fear, anxiety, loss, grief, and isolation.

The concept of resilience in recovery is also vital for family members who need access to intentional supports that promote their health and well-being. The support of peers and friends is also crucial in engaging and supporting individuals in recovery.

How Can I Prevent Substance Use Disorder from Impacting my Family?

We believe that effective substance-misuse prevention involves a combination of family-based and community efforts.

Parental monitoring and supervision are critical, as are family bonding and parental involvement, developing open parent-child communication, and enforcing family policies on substance abuse.

Drug education and information for parents or caregivers reinforces what children are learning about the harmful effects of drugs and opens opportunities for family discussions about the misuse of legal and illegal substances.

Schools and the community-at-large can also contribute. Community prevention programs reaching populations in multiple settings – for example, schools, clubs, faith-based organizations, and the media—are most effective when they present consistent, community-wide messages in each setting.

Evidence-based school prevention programs that provide age-appropriate training – academic and social-emotional learning to address risk factors for drug misuse in the early years and increased academic and social competence with the study habits and academic support in middle and high school levels – are important.

Many people who suffer from a substance use disorder recall starting their drug-misuse habits in their pre-teen and teenage years. Conversations are one of the most powerful tools parents can use to connect with – and protect – their children. Some key principles of communication are:

- Always keep conversations open and honest.
- Come from a place of love, even when you're having tough conversations.
- Balance positive reinforcement and negative reinforcement.

- Keep in mind that teachable moments come up all of the time—be mindful of natural places for the conversation to go in order to broach the topic of drugs and alcohol.

"Children who regularly have conversations with their parent or guardian are less likely to use substances."

Tips for Conversations with Your Teenager

Here are some guidelines for talking to your teenager about substance use:

- Make sure your teen knows your rules and the consequences for breaking those rules — and, most important, that you really will enforce those consequences if the rules are broken.
- Make it clear that you disapprove of all alcohol, tobacco and drug use. As teens are extremely concerned with their physical appearance, remind your teen about the negative effects of alcohol, tobacco and other drugs have on physical appearance.
- Let your teen in on all the things you find wonderful about him. He needs to hear a lot of positive comments about his life and who he is as an individual — and not just when he makes the basketball team or does well on a test. Positive reinforcement can go a long way in preventing drug misuse among teens.

- Show interest in and discuss your child's daily ups and downs. You'll earn your child's trust, learn how to talk to each other, and won't take your child by surprise when you voice a strong point of view about drugs.
- Don't just leave your child's anti-drug education up to her school. Ask your teen what she's learned about drugs in school and then build on that with additional topics, such as how and why chemical dependence occurs; the unpredictable nature of dependency and how it varies from person to person; the impact of drug use on maintaining a healthy lifestyle; or positive approaches to stress reduction.
- Encourage your teen to volunteer somewhere that he can see the impact of drugs on your community. Teenagers tend to be idealistic and enjoy hearing about ways they can help make an impact. Help your teen research volunteer opportunities at local homeless shelters, hospitals, or victim-services centers.

What If I Suspect My Loved One Has a Problem?

Substance use disorder can happen at any age, but it usually starts when a person is young. Young people use substances to address needs such as handling boredom, fitting in with peers, or self-medicating. Substance use before the brain has finished developing in one's mid-20s, places young people at greater risk for mental health disorders.

If your teen continues to use drugs despite harmful consequences, he or she may be at risk of developing a substance use disorder.

"Intervening early when you first spot signs of drug use in your teen is critical— don't wait for your loved one to develop a substance use disorder before you seek help"

Aside from direct evidence (such as bottles, bags or other paraphernalia), parents often see physical, emotional and behavioral changes such as risky use, impaired control, social problems, and increasing use of substances or distressing withdrawal symptoms when not using substances.

Some behavioral changes that may occur with substance use are:

- Loss of interest in hobbies or extracurricular activities.
- Comments from teachers, classmates or friends.
- Changes in friendships.
- Mood swings.
- Irritability or argumentativeness.
- Unusual agitation, restlessness or hyperactivity.
- Lethargy or lack of motivation.

- Locking doors, demanding more privacy, isolating or missing family events.
- Declining grades, skipping school or poor work performance.
- Becoming more accident-prone.
- Engaging in risky behaviors (such as sex or driving under the influence).
- Borrowing or taking money or valuables.
- Missing prescription drugs or alcohol.

Some teens are better than others at keeping their habits a secret and covering up their symptoms. It's up to you to be diligent in your observations, without jumping to any conclusions.

If My Loved One Has a Problem, Where Do I Start?

If you've just discovered or have reason to believe your child is using drugs, the first thing to do is sit down and take a deep breath. We know it's a scary time. Before you intervene, take time to prepare yourself for the important conversation ahead, and to lay the foundation for more positive outcomes.

We find that becoming educated about substance use disorder—whether through your own research or by talking to an addiction specialist—and reaching out to other parents for support will help give the clarity and strength to face the future.

Substance misuse can tear families apart. Addressing a serious drug or alcohol use issue within the family puts parents to the test as much as anything ever will. But it's important that, above all else, you remain calm. If you suspect there's an underlying substance use issue with your teen, it's not the end of the world.

Some universal ideas of what you can work with are:

- Love your addicted child no matter what. Put aside your anger, fear, disappointment and let them know that you are scared because you love them deeply.
- Don't preach, lecture or scold, it will only make matters worse. Be empathetic but firm.
- Let them know rules are rules (calmly). Your job as a parent is to help your addicted child grow up and keep them out of trouble. Inform them of what could happen like jails, overdose, or even death.
- Have them see a therapist. Your child may be able to talk to a therapist easier than to you. A therapist will help them behind closed doors, you just need to trust them.

Don't Do This Yourself

You're not a superhero. Nobody expects you to be. As signs start to build, reach out for help in the matter. Assuming you can help your teenager by yourself can be overwhelming in situations like these, and can set you—and more importantly, your teen—up for failure. Realize you are not alone, and the challenges ahead can start to appear more manageable.

Help can be in the form of immediate family or family friends, your child's friends, teachers or school counselors, doctors, or intervention specialists.

Building a support network will help you keep a level head, get various perspectives on the situation and make the best decision for moving forward. There are many family support groups active in Chester County. Seek them out and find one that's right for you.

Talk with Your Spouse or Partner

We're all familiar with the trick of turning to one parent when the other says no. It's best if you and your spouse come to a common stance on drug and alcohol use before raising the subject with your child.

- Remind each other that nobody is to blame.
- Come to an agreement on the position you'll take.

- Even if you disagree, commit to presenting a united front.
- Pledge not to undermine or bad-talk each other.
- Remind each other to come from a place of love when talking to your son or daughter.

Talk to Them

When you decide to start talking to your children about drugs, remember that there's a huge difference between confronting substance use disorder versus having a conversation about it. Avoid confrontations at all costs.

Psychologists often recommend that the best approach to getting a teenager to open up about the topic is to ask them about their friends. By finding out what they think about friends who are using or getting in trouble for using, you may gain insight into how they feel about the topic.

Prepare to Be Called a Hypocrite

You're likely to be asked whether or not you've done drugs, and there are ways to answer honestly that keep the emphasis less on you, and more on what you want for your son or daughter. You could explain that you tried drugs in order to fit in, only to discover that's never a good reason to do anything. Or you can focus on the fact that drugs affect everyone differently, and just because your life wasn't harmed by drug use, you've seen it happen to too many others.

Don't let your response become a justification for your child's drug use. Focus on the issue at hand – that you don't want your son or daughter drinking or using drugs.

- Be honest—but be sure they know you don't want them using.
- If you use tobacco and your child calls you on this, mention that you are an adult, and yes, you can do this since it's legal, but you understand that you shouldn't and it's not healthy. Underscore how hard it is to stop as an adult and that you want to help your child to avoid making the same mistakes.

- If you're in recovery, think of your past experiences as a gift you can use to sway your child. Tell your child, "I did these things, but I made wrong choices, and I want you to learn the lessons from my mistakes."

No matter what, this is still your child. How you react can mean all the difference in their recovery.

It takes a lot of courage to seek help for a child with a possible drug problem. There is a lot of hard work ahead for both of you, but treatment works, and teens can recover from substance use disorder.

Don't Enable Them

Often, parents of teens wrapped up in substance misuse, slip into enabling. This is when the detrimental behavior is implicitly accepted and allowed to continue because a parent is in denial of the circumstances their teen finds themselves in. Enabling looks like this:

- Ignoring the person with SUD's negative or potentially dangerous behavior.
- Difficulty expressing emotions.
- Prioritizing the person with a SUD's needs before your own.
- Acting out of fear.
- Lying to others to cover the person with SUD's behavior.
- Blaming people or situations other than the person with SUD.
- Resenting the person with SUD.

Does My Loved One Need to See a Professional?

If you notice signs of substance misuse in your teen, contact a professional right away. The longer that substance misuse is allowed to take place, the more difficult it becomes for your teen to get healthy again. Your family doctor can screen your child and determine whether they're simply experimenting or a suffering from a substance use disorder.

When you're considering which treatment option would be best, be sure to talk to a professional who is well-versed in Substance Use Disorder /Recovery and who can complete a comprehensive assessment to determine level of care and length of stay.

If you or your medical specialist decides your teen can benefit from substance use disorder treatment, there are many options available. Treatment approaches must be tailored to address each patient's unique substance abuse patterns and related medical, psychiatric, and social problems. An addiction specialist can advise you about your best options.

What Are the Treatment Options for My Loved?

Treatment Approaches

Substance use disorder can be treated, but it's not simple. No single treatment is right for everyone—there are multiple pathways to recovery. Treatment must help the person stop using drugs, stay drug-free, and be productive in the family, at work, and in society.

"Quitting is difficult, even for those who feel ready. Remember, the inability to stop using drugs is not a moral failing, but rather an illness that needs to be treated."¹

Successful treatment has several steps and a range of care with a tailored treatment program and follow-up options can be crucial to success. Treatment should include both medical and mental health services as needed. Follow-up care may include community- or family-based recovery support systems.

Here is a brief description on each of these therapies:

Behavioral therapies help patients modify their attitudes and behaviors related to drug use, increase healthy life skills, and continue with other forms of treatment, such as medication, known as Medication-Assisted Treatment (MAT).

Outpatient behavioral treatment includes a wide variety of programs for patients who visit a behavioral health counselor on a regular schedule. Most of the programs involve individual or group drug counseling, or both. These programs typically offer forms of behavioral therapy such as:

- Cognitive-behavioral therapy, which helps patients recognize, avoid, and cope with the situations in which they are most likely to use drugs.
- Multidimensional family therapy—developed for adolescents with drug abuse problems as well as their families—which addresses a range of influences on their drug abuse patterns and is designed to improve overall family functioning.
- Motivational interviewing, which makes the most of people's readiness to change their behavior and enter treatment.
- Motivational incentives (contingency management), which uses positive reinforcement to encourage abstinence from drugs.

Treatment is sometimes intensive at first, where patients attend multiple outpatient sessions each week. After completing intensive treatment, patients transition to regular outpatient treatment, which meets less often and for fewer hours per week to help sustain their recovery.

Intensive Outpatient (IOP) is organized, non-residential treatment that includes individual, group, and family counseling. This provides more structured psychotherapy and client stability through increased periods of staff intervention. Individuals in this level of care may acknowledge a problem but minimize its impact and have a limited understanding of the process of recovery.

Partial Hospitalization includes individual, group, and family counseling, as well as ancillary life skills services. Individuals in this level of care have high levels of SUD symptoms, and there is a high likelihood of use without close monitoring and structured support.

Inpatient or residential treatment can also be very effective, especially for those with more severe problems. Licensed residential treatment facilities offer 24-hour structured and intensive care, including safe housing and medical attention. Residential treatment facilities may use a variety of therapeutic approaches, and they are generally aimed at helping the patient live a drug-free, crime-free lifestyle after treatment. Examples of residential treatment settings include:

- Detox (detoxification) is the process whereby a drug- or alcohol-intoxicated or dependent person is assisted through the period of time required to eliminate the presence of the intoxicating substance. This process also includes efforts to motivate and support the client to seek treatment after detox.
- Short-Term Residential services include 24-hour professionally directed evaluation, care and treatment for addicted patients in acute distress. They may exhibit symptoms of moderate impairment of social, occupational, or school functioning. Rehabilitation is a key treatment goal.
- Long-Term Residential services include 24-hour professionally directed evaluation, care and treatment for those in acute distress. These programs serve patients with chronic deficits in social, educational, and economic skills, impaired personality and interpersonal skills, and significant drug-misusing histories that often include criminal lifestyles and subcultures. Rehabilitation is the treatment goal.

Halfway House is a live-in/work-out environment that provides substance use treatment, assistance in economic/social adjustment, and the integration of life and recovery skills into daily life. The halfway house emphasizes the protective and supportive elements of family living, and encourages and provides opportunities for independent growth and responsible community living. Persons entering this environment must have already had another type of drug and alcohol treatment.

Recovery housing or “recovery residence,” is supervised, short-term housing where the newly sober can continue to be monitored, counseled and adjust to sobriety in a safe environment. Recovery housing can help people make the transition to an independent life—for example, helping them learn how to manage finances or seek employment, as well as connecting them to support services in the community.

Recovery support services are additional, nonclinical services needed for someone to maintain substance use disorder recovery. These services may include transportation, childcare, drug testing, safe and sober housing, and care management.

According to the National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA), Treatment does not need to be voluntary to be effective. Strong motivation can facilitate the treatment process. Sanctions or enticements in the family, employment setting, or criminal justice system can increase significantly both treatment entry and retention rates and the success of drug treatment interventions. Individuals who enter treatment under legal pressure have outcomes as favorable as those who enter treatment voluntarily.

Medications Used in Substance Use Disorder Treatment

Medications are an important element of treatment for many patients, especially when combined with counseling and other behavioral therapies.

According to NIDA, several medications have been found to be effective in treating opioid use disorder (heroin and pain relievers), alcohol, or nicotine in adults. Although none of these medications have been approved by the FDA to treat adolescents, some health care providers do use medications “off-label” when treating adolescents (especially older adolescents) who are addicted to opioids, nicotine, or (less commonly) alcohol. There are currently no FDA-approved medications to treat cannabis, cocaine, or methamphetamine use disorders in any age group.

Medications can be used to manage withdrawal symptoms, prevent relapse, and treat co-occurring conditions.

Opioid Use Disorders

Buprenorphine reduces or eliminates opioid withdrawal symptoms, including drug cravings, without producing the “high” or dangerous side effects of heroin and other opioids. It does this by both activating and blocking opioid receptors in the brain i.e., it is what is known as a partial opioid agonist.

Buprenorphine is available for sublingual (under-the-tongue) administration both in a stand-alone formulation (called Subutex®) and in combination with another agent called naloxone. The naloxone in the combined formulation (marketed as Suboxone®) is included to deter diversion or abuse of the medication by causing a withdrawal reaction if it is intravenously injected.

Methadone also prevents withdrawal symptoms and reduces craving in individuals with an opioid-use disorder (OUD), by activating opioid receptors in the brain (i.e., a full opioid agonist). Methadone and levo-alpha-acetylmethadol (LAAM) are very effective in helping individuals who have OUD stabilize their lives and reduce their illicit drug use.

Naltrexone is approved for the prevention of relapse in adult patients following complete detoxification from opioids. It acts by blocking the brain’s opioid receptors i.e., an opioid antagonist, preventing opioid drugs from acting on them and thus blocking the high the user would normally feel and/or causing withdrawal if recent opioid use has occurred. It can be taken orally in tablets or as a once-monthly injection given in a doctor’s office (a preparation called Vivitrol®).

Alcohol Use Disorders

Acamprosate (Campral®) reduces withdrawal symptoms by normalizing brain systems disrupted by chronic alcohol consumption in adults.

Disulfiram (Antabuse®) inhibits an enzyme involved in the metabolism of alcohol, causing an unpleasant reaction if alcohol is consumed after taking the medication.

Naltrexone decreases alcohol-induced euphoria and is available in both oral tablets and long-acting injectable preparations (as in its use for the treatment of OUD too).

Nicotine Use Disorders

Bupropion, commonly prescribed for depression, also reduces nicotine cravings and withdrawal symptoms in adult smokers.

Nicotine Replacement Therapies (NRTs) help smokers wean off cigarettes by activating nicotine receptors in the brain. They are available in the form of a patch, gum, lozenge, nasal spray, or inhaler.

Varenicline reduces nicotine cravings and withdrawal in adult smokers by mildly stimulating nicotine receptors in the brain.

Other medications are available to treat possible mental health conditions (such as depression) that might be contributing to your child's addiction.

Your treatment provider will advise you about what medications are available for your particular situation. Some treatment centers follow the philosophy that they should not treat a drug use disorder with other drugs, but research shows that medication can help in many cases.

Naloxone (Narcan®)

Naloxone (brand names Narcan®, EVZIO®) is a medication that can reverse an opioid overdose i.e. prescription pain medication or heroin. When given during an overdose, naloxone blocks the effects of opioids on the brain and restores breathing within two to eight minutes.

"Naloxone has been used safely for more than 40 years and has only one function: to reverse the effects of opioids on the brain and respiratory system in order to prevent death."

You can get naloxone at most pharmacies. It may not be available for same-day pick up, but can often be ordered and available within a day or two. Although it should not be needed, you can present the pharmacist with the Pennsylvania's standing order (a prescription written for the general public) issued by the Pennsylvania Physician General. The standing order is kept on file at many pharmacies, or may be downloaded here. You can also ask your doctor for a prescription.

The Chester County Drug and Alcohol Services Department and its partner Kacie's Cause also distribute free Narcan at events each year.

For more information about naloxone, you can visit the website for Stop Overdose Chester County, <https://stopodchesco.org>, or click here. NIDA also has information on naloxone on its website, www.drugabuse.gov, which you can read by clicking here, as does the website GetNaloxoneNow.org.

Getting Access to Services

Access to services may be different depending on whether the individual is insured or uninsured. If you have insurance (commercial or Medicaid/Medical Assistance), refer to the back of the insurance card. For those without insurance, funding assistance is available to Pennsylvania residents from the Chester County Department of Drug and Alcohol Services.

To qualify for funding from Chester County Department of Drug and Alcohol, the treatment requested must be consistent with assessed need and placement criteria. Based on the assessment, a referral will be made to the appropriate treatment program. Providers that offer assessments are listed in Part 2 of this Guide under Intensive Outpatient Facilities.

Finding A Substance Use Disorder Therapist

Addiction counselors and therapists are a key component to the successful treatment of substance use disorder. They guide patients to sobriety while providing support and understanding as they go through recovery. Counselors also act as a mediator between patients and their loved ones to ensure a sustainable, ongoing recovery for everyone. Addiction counselors may operate a private practice, be part of a mental health clinic, or work in a hospital or rehab center.

Your insurance coverage may determine how many options you have, but if it is flexible, you could ask for recommendations from family, friends, or your doctor. You can get recommendations from another professional, friend, or family member. If you belong to a recovery or family support group, you can ask fellow members for names. Information and reviews on specific counselors can often be found online.

Another resource is a listing of addiction counselors and behavioral therapists in the online version of Psychology Today. This site contains a wealth of information on providers, including qualifications, fees and payment options, specialties and medical issues, and treatment approaches. You can access that site by clicking here, or go to www.psychologytoday.com, click on the "Find a Therapist" box and type in your zip code.

You can check reviews online and review the therapist's website and other sites where their practice might be listed to see that they offer "evidenced-based" or "best practices" treatment.

If you believe you may have found someone that will meet your needs, speak with them on the phone or set up an initial meeting to see if you feel comfortable with them. It's okay to say you are shopping for a therapist and would like to ask some questions or let the person know what is going on to see if it even makes sense to set up an appointment. This also allows the therapist to gauge whether you're a good fit for him or her, and if not, to offer a referral. Ask questions about how they run counseling sessions and how they will engage with you. A reputable substance abuse counselor will answer your questions to ensure you understand what they offer.

Finding a Treatment Service Provider

You can start by using SAMHSA's Behavioral Health Treatment Services Locator. This service lets you search for a provider in your area and gives information about the treatment center, including payment information for each of the treatment services listed and payment assistance.

You can also contact the Chester County Department of Drugs and Alcohol, which may be able to assist with payment for substance use treatment. The department's Information and Referral Line is (866) 286-3767.

How Do I Find Help for Myself?

Substance use disorder affects the entire family. Therefore, it is important that the families of those with substance use disorder educate themselves about the disease and find help and support. Fortunately, there is an abundance of resources to help family members in Chester County.

Most treatment providers have a family component to their programs. If your loved one is participating in treatment with a provider, you may want to explore their family orientation, education series or family sessions.

Mutual help groups, such as Al-Anon, Nar-Anon and Alateen are widely available and free resources for family members. Most professional treatment programs also offer family groups to help families support their loved ones struggling with substance use. You can also find churches and faith-based organizations that offer such support.

If the person needing treatment is covered by health benefits for veterans, the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) can help you find VA services near you. Visit the VA Substance Use Disorder Program Locator to do your search. Additionally, Veterans are eligible for funding through the Chester County Department of Drugs and Alcohol for treatment services. We have included a list of licensed treatment providers in Chester County in Part 2 of this Guide.

Addiction counselors and therapists often conduct private counseling for family members, usually on a fee-for-service basis.

Support organizations, government agencies and many other sources offer educational materials on addiction and recovery. We have included a list of family support/mutual aid groups in Part 2 of this Guide.

My Loved One is in Recovery – Now What?

While group counseling is sometimes discouraged for teens, peer support groups for teens can be a useful companion to treatment. Self-help groups and other support services can extend the effects of professional treatment for a teen recovering from a substance use disorder.

Such groups can be particularly helpful during recovery, offering an added layer of community-level social support to help teens maintain healthy lifestyle behaviors. If your teen is in treatment, your treatment provider will likely be able to tell you about good support groups.

The most well-known self-help groups are those affiliated with Alcoholics Anonymous \(AA\), and Narcotics Anonymous \(NA\). Both organizations are based on the 12-step model. Support groups for family members of people with addictions, like Al-Anon and Alateen, can also be helpful.

Chester County has many local self-help organizations for families and those suffering from substance-use disorder. You can find a list of these organizations in Part 2, beginning on page 26.

Finally, fellowship and safe, drug-free activities and places are vital to sustained recovery. We have provided a list of organizations that offer these activities in Part 2 on page 47.

Transitional/Sober Living Residences

Pennsylvania offers a broad selection of transitional/sober living homes from which to choose. While all homes have some similar requirements, such as periodic drug-testing, it is important to appreciate that “one size does not fit all.” Levels of support vary according to support level and most recovery residences serve specific populations and recovery pathways. The Pennsylvania Alliance of Recovery Residences (PARR) provides certification of recovery residences in the state. Here is PARR’s contact information:

Adult Children of Alcoholics (ACA)

<https://.adultchildren.org>

(310) 534-1815

Adult Children of Alcoholics (ACA)/Dysfunctional Families is a Twelve Step, Twelve Tradition program of men and women over 18 who grew up in alcoholic or otherwise dysfunctional homes.

ACA provides a safe, nonjudgmental environment that allows us to grieve our childhoods and conduct an honest inventory of ourselves and our family—so we may (i) identify and heal core trauma, (ii) experience freedom from shame and abandonment, and (iii) become our own loving parents. Click here to find an ACA meeting.

Al-Anon Family Groups

www.pa-al-anon.org

Al-Anon Information Service of the Delaware Valley <http://www.aisdv.org/>

In Al-Anon and Alateen, members share their own experience, strength, and hope with each other. They will meet others who share feelings and frustrations, if not your exact situation. We come together to learn a better way of life, to find happiness whether the alcoholic is still drinking or not.

Al-Anon members do not give direction or advice to other members. Instead, they share their personal experiences and stories, and invite other members to “take what they like and leave the rest”—that is, to determine for themselves what lesson they could apply to their own lives.

Caron Parent and Family Groups

Nar-Anon

<https://www.nar-anon.org>

The Nar-Anon Family Groups is primarily for those who know or have known a feeling of desperation concerning the addiction problem of someone very near to them. The Nar-Anon is a 12-step program designed to help relatives and friends of addicts recover from the effects of living with an addicted relative or friend. The program of recovery uses Nar-Anon's Twelve Steps and Twelve Traditions. The only requirement to be a member and attend Nar-Anon meetings is that there is a problem of drugs or addiction in a relative or friend.

Recovery Support/Mutual Aid Groups

Below are support organizations operating in Chester County listed in alphabetical order. *The descriptions of the services they offer are from their website. Inclusion in this list is not an endorsement of any particular organization.

Alcoholics Anonymous

<https://www.aa.org>

Southeast Pennsylvania region: <https://www.aasepia.org>

Perhaps one of the most well-known 12-Step programs is Alcoholics Anonymous (AA), essentially a support group for individuals in recovery from alcoholism. Alcoholics Anonymous is an international fellowship of men and women who have had a drinking problem. It is nonprofessional, self-supporting, multiracial, apolitical, and available almost everywhere. There are no age or education requirements. Membership is open to anyone who wants to do something about his or her drinking problem. Even though AA is not based on a specific religion, the 12-Step model does have religious, or at least spiritual, undertones.

Families Anonymous

<https://www.familiesanonymous.org>

FA is a 12-step fellowship for the family and friends of those individuals with drug, alcohol or related behavioral issues. Members include parents, grandparents, siblings, spouses, significant others, other family members and friends of those with a current, suspected or former drug problem.

Narcotics Anonymous

<https://www.na.org>; Eastern PA Region: <https://eparna.org>

Narcotics Anonymous is a global, community-based organization with a multi-lingual and multicultural membership. Founded in 1953, NA offers recovery from the effects of addiction through working a twelve-step program, including regular attendance at group meetings. The group atmosphere provides help from peers and offers an ongoing support network for addicts who wish to pursue and maintain a drug-free lifestyle. The name, Narcotics Anonymous, is not meant to imply a focus on any particular drug; NA's approach makes no distinction between drugs including alcohol. Membership is free, and we have no affiliation with any organizations outside of NA including governments, religions, law enforcement groups, or medical and psychiatric associations.

SMART Recovery

<https://www.smartrecovery.org>

Self-Management And Recovery Training (SMART) is an abstinence-oriented, not-for-profit organization for individuals with addictive problems. SMART Recovery is a global community of mutual-support groups. At its self-empowering, free mutual support meetings, participants help one another resolve problems with any addiction (to drugs or alcohol or to activities such as gambling or over-eating, focusing on ideas and techniques to help you change your life from one that is self-destructive and unhappy to one that is constructive and satisfying. SMART Recovery does not use labels like "addict" or "alcoholic." We teach scientifically validated methods designed to empower you to change and to develop a more positive lifestyle. In SMART we focus on learning coping skills that work well short- and long-term. We base our ideas on what addiction science has shown to be effective. We have adapted these ideas into SMART's tools for change.

Other Substance Abuse Support Groups in Chester County

In addition to the recovery support groups listed above, many private behavioral therapists and addiction counselor practices offer support groups and group therapy sessions, at various price points. You can access a directory of Chester County private support groups by visiting the Psychology Today website, www.psychologytoday.com/us/groups/addiction/pa/chester-county or by clicking here.

Support/Mutual Aid Group Meeting Schedules

For your convenience, we have included schedules of meetings held in and near Chester County for the family and recovery support and mutual-aid groups listed on the previous pages. These schedules are taken from the organizations' websites and, while we have made every effort to be accurate and current, the information may change. This is especially true during the coronavirus pandemic, which has caused many organizations to cancel in-person meetings or move to virtual meeting formats. We encourage you to check with the contact listed for the group or its website to confirm meeting times, dates, and locations.

Email: info@cluba.org

Club Anonymous, Inc. became a non-profit organization in 1977. Our purpose is to own and operate a building at 131 Gay Street in Phoenixville, PA 19460 in order to provide a place for conducting Alcoholics Anonymous and other similar 12-step program meetings. Club Anonymous, Inc. is not affiliated with Alcoholics Anonymous World Services, Inc.

Malvern Center

10 Liberty Boulevard
Malvern, PA 19355

www.malverncenter.org

Email: questions@malverncenter.org

Malvern Center (also known as Malvern Clubhouse) hosts Twelve Step recovery groups and meetings ~ helping people from all walks of life achieve independence. We've come a long way since our founding members opened a little space on King Street in 1965. We provide meeting space for Alcoholics Anonymous, Narcotics Anonymous, ACA, OA, AI-Anon and other Twelve Step fellowships. We're open from 6:30 am to 9:30 pm Saturday through Thursday, and until 1 am on Fridays. Malvern Center is a privately held 501(3) nonprofit supported by group rents, meeting collections, and memberships.
